ST URSULA'S BERNE

The church is one of the nine Swiss chaplaincies that have a resident chaplain (minister) and together form the Archdeaconry of Switzerland. This is part of the Anglican Diocese of Europe which stretches from the Canary Islands to Ankara, from Moscow to Morocco.

The church was built in 1906 on a site that had been given to the community by the British-Berne Land Co. An American lady, Mrs Castleman from St Louis, provided the bulk of the money for the building as a thank offering for the near miraculous recovery of her adopted daughter, who was treated at the clinic of the famous Professor Kocher.

The hall and the house were added in 1959. An English Missionary Society, the USPG, helped to support the church from its earliest days. Since 1977, however, the chaplaincy has been fully self-supporting, relying solely on its members and well-wishers for its financial support.

St Ursula's has a long tradition of ministry to all English-speaking people in the Canton of Berne and beyond. It also provides a home for Christians from many different denominations and cultural backgrounds. Regular worshippers are encouraged to add their names to the Electoral Roll and so play a full part in the life of the church. Details from the Churchwardens or any member of the Church Council.

Stephen Writes...

People are often puzzled by the fact that Easter is a moveable feast, meaning that it is not fixed in relation to the civil calendar, and many wish that it was fixed like Christmas. The council of Nicea (325) established the date of Easter as the first Sunday after the full moon following the March equinox. The date of Easter varies therefore between 22 March and 25 April.

In fact it goes back further to the Jewish Calendar and their setting for the feast of Passover or Pesach in Hebrew which took place in the spring month known as Nisan.

The Passover is central to both the Jewish and Christian story. A vivid tale it goes back more than three thousand years to when the Hebrew people were enslaved in Egypt.

Moses, then a shepherd, heard God speaking to him from a burning bush and knew that he was called to challenge the oppressive Pharaoh to 'let my people go.' Pharaoh resisted the plagues that fell upon the land and then came the final plague: the death of the first born sons. Moses told the people to ready themselves for a journey. Lambs were sacrificed and their blood splashed on the lintels of the doors as a protection against the plague. They were to bake bread without yeast and to 'gird their loins' hitching up their skirts into their belts. Thus the Exodus began as the Hebrews made their way towards the Sea of Reeds.

It is a moment remembered ever since and significantly for Christians, it was whilst celebrating the Passover that Jesus came to his own moment of crisis and triumph. He sends the disciples into Jerusalem where preparations for the Passover meal have already been made. Here he institutes the Lord's Supper and transforms the Passover celebration into another moment to be remembered forever, the Eucharist. Here, Jesus himself becomes the sacrificial Lamb, the bread and wine his body and blood. His own moment of Passover becomes a Passover for all people, everywhere, always. The death of Jesus on the cross and his resurrection on the third day signal a new dispensation in the world order.

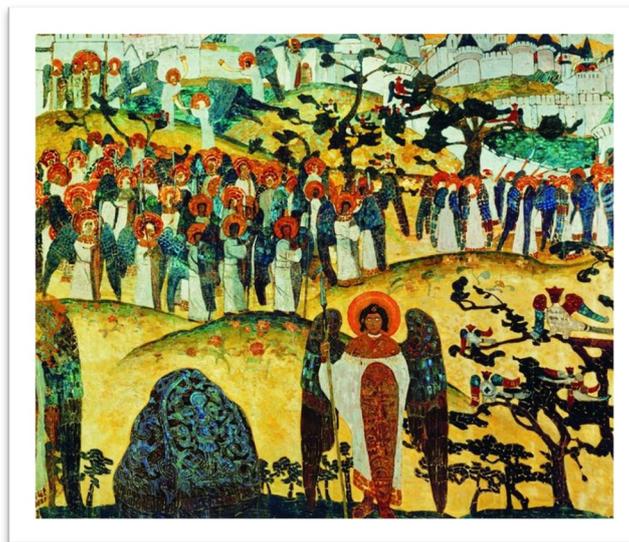

Jonathan Sacks, the former Chief Rabbi writes of how the Bible seems to indicate that the journey from slavery to freedom is one that people have to travel in every generation. The Passover for Jews is the moment when they are reminded what it is like to be slaves and what it feels like to be set free.

For Christians our liberation comes with the death and resurrection of Jesus, events we gather around during Holy Week and especially the Great Three Days. Here we learn a great truth of our faith, that God wants us to be free. Discovering what that freedom means is the joy of being Christian and the reason that we celebrate Easter as the greatest feast of all.

Christ is risen, he is risen indeed, alleluia!

The Lord will Provide?

Treasure of angels by Nicholas Roerich, 1904-1905

Does God have a plan for you? Not just a plan for the world in general, but one specifically for you? Many of the Eastern religions, many of the abstract philosophies would deny that God is concerned with individuals (and some, of course, would deny that God has any part in planning what happens, or should happen, in the universe – or even that God has any objective existence!)

For the writers of the Bible, both the Old Testament and the New, the answer without hesitation would be “of course”. “It was you who formed my inward parts; you knit me together in my mother’s womb,” sang the Psalmist (139:13). God’s word came to Adam, to Noah, to Abraham, to Moses, to Elijah, to all the prophets – and if they heard what God wanted from them and went their own way, well, see what happened to Jonah.

But, you may say, we are not all like Mary, with a unique place in God’s plan of salvation. We are not all like the future apostle Paul, confronted by a blinding vision on the way to Damascus. We are not all like Isaiah, able to say “Here I am, send me.” But we do not need to be giants of faith for God to call us. We all have a part in God’s work, and God calls each of us, even if just in a support rôle. “The gifts he gave were that some would be apostles, some prophets, some evangelists, some pastors and teachers, to equip the saints for the work of ministry, for building up the body of Christ, until all of us come to the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, to maturity, to the measure of the full stature of Christ.” (Eph 4:13)

Of course, if God calls, we need to listen. Isaiah was told that the message he brought would fall on deaf ears, that the people who heard him would not “turn and be healed” (Is. 6:10). One definition of sin may well be failing to go along with what God has planned for us.

We are very unlikely to be able to listen to God all the time, and the New Testament suggests that even when we ourselves are inattentive, each of us has a guardian angel, constantly in God’s presence. What Jesus says about little children (“In heaven their angels continually see the face of my Father in heaven” (Matthew 18:10)) is true for every one of us. The idea of angels strikes us as strange these days, and we may be puzzled by the group in Acts 12 who think the apostle Peter is in prison, and don’t believe Rhoda the servant girl when she says that Peter is at the door – they tell her it is not him but his angel. Angels represent what God wants for us, and for the world.

God’s plan is that we work together to bring the world closer to God’s kingdom, and when we pray for God’s will to be done on earth as in heaven, we need to listen and to ask ourselves how we fit in with this plan. We are all individuals, and each of us has our own abilities. The Parable of the Talents (Matt 25:14-30) implies that God does not very much care about the details of how we use these abilities, as long as we do use them, and use them in God’s service.

So God’s plan is not necessarily a detailed one. We cannot ask God whether we should have corn flakes or muesli for breakfast. We cannot ask God if we should shop in Globus or in Aldi. Even issues that seem vital to us are not always important when seen through the lens of eternity. We can serve God just as well whether we are appointed Archbishop or empty the litter bins along the street, whether we marry Y or X, whether we live frugally or lavishly. The important thing is to choose God’s options, and to see God’s blessings. Even Job, for whom God had planned things that Job and his friends least expected, recognized this: “The Lord gave, and the Lord has taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!”

A Word for the Month – Whale

Jonah and the Whale by Pieter Lastman, 1621

There are definitely no real whales in the Bible. And if this article were really about whales, it would plead for respect for the vast and gentle mammals of the ocean. God rules over Creation, and even if we have no compunction over slaughtering mosquitoes and food moths, we should think twice before turning creatures which in no way threaten us into soap and margarine.

Yet there are whales in the Bible, and its writers would have known that such creatures existed – four species of whale regularly make their home in the Mediterranean, with lengths of up to 24 metres. There are whales because, when the Bible was translated from Hebrew into Greek, centuries before Jesus' birth, the translators used the word ketos, from which we get the English word cetacean, for words that referred to giant sea creatures – real or mythical. There are whales because, when Matthew quotes Jesus' words about Jonah (12:40), he is writing in Greek and the translators of the 16th century knew that ketos = whale.

The first of these ketoi appears in the first chapter of Genesis, when God forms creatures to live in the sea. The first of these are sea monsters, and from their name in Hebrew, powerful and destructive ones (though in modern Hebrew the word also means "crocodiles"). The original readers of the Creation story in Genesis 1 would have known the creation stories of the civilizations round about them. They would have known stories about a fight with a fearsome sea serpent, about a sun god and a moon god. The creation story we have in our Bibles tread a completely different path. God creates everything. The sun, moon and stars are just there to mark times and seasons. The great serpent is just a fish like any other.

The story of the giant sea monster occurs again and again in the Old Testament, sometimes under the name Leviathan, sometimes under the name Rahab, sometimes venturing out of the deep and wandering as a dragon. Sometimes the monster is threatening, and needs to be slain. "In that day, the Lord will punish with his sword – his fierce, great and powerful sword – Leviathan the gliding serpent, Leviathan the coiling serpent; he will slay the monster of the sea." (Isaiah 27:1). Sometimes, we know that God is in command – when Psalm 104:26 talks of the sea: "There go the ships, and Leviathan that you formed to sport in it."

Scholars will argue about the place of these sea creatures in the story of God's relation to the created world, but one sea creature remains: the one that swallowed Jonah.

Jonah was told by God to go to Nineveh and warn them of their sins. He disobeys, and takes a ship for Tarshish, Spain, the opposite direction. There is a storm, the sailors cast lots and decide the storm is God's punishment directed against Jonah. They throw him overboard. A big fish swallows him. (The Hebrew text says a big fish – the Greek says whale – but we know neither whales nor fish swallow people!). After three days inside, Jonah is vomited on to a beach in the direction of Gentile Nineveh.

A strange story, but one with a lesson, and not only about God's patience and persistence with sulking Jonah. For Jesus tells the Pharisees that the only sign they will see of his ministry will be "the sign of Jonah". After three days "in the earth", Jesus will rise up, and the world will repent, as the Ninevites repented. If we read Jonah's prayer from inside the fish (Jonah 2:2-9), we can see how closely the two events parallel each other. Like the empty tomb, the vomiting fish brings the sinful world firmly back under God's control. Jonah's emergence from the belly of the fish is a rebirth, just as the resurrection is a rebirth, and just as each of us is born again when we believe and are baptized. Jonah is a reluctant prophet, but through the experience of God which he undergoes in the "big fish", the people of Gentile Nineveh repent of their sins, and the city is spared, "in which there are more than a hundred and twenty thousand persons who do not know their right hand from their left, and also many animals". Perhaps God has a task for you too – so remember what happened to Jonah!

When a stranger sojourns with you in your land, you shall not do him wrong. The stranger who sojourns with you shall be to you as the native among you, and you shall love him as yourself; for you were strangers in the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.

The wasteland of the Calais Jungle (October 2016)

We have many things to be grateful for in our lives. Paradoxically, those gifts for which we ought to be most thankful are rarely on our minds or in our prayers. We take them for granted: even worse, at times we even run the risk of deceiving ourselves that we have earned our earthly welfare and prosperity through our hard work, intellectual or physical abilities, or even our faithful prayers. Among this long list of ‘forgotten blessings’ are the security of our homes and local community, the nutritious diets and superabundance of food we enjoy, and — not least — the comforting smiles and welcoming embraces of our families and friends.

Every single one of the sheer countless number of refugees in our world has left behind all of these things: the place they call ‘home’; their job, possessions, and the ability to care for (and feed) themselves; their loved ones. Few have been fortunate to find a new home where they can begin a new life; many have become trapped in unending stories of migration and displacement, arduous journeys from one refugee camp to the next. By October 2016, this journey had found its provisional destination for over 8,000 migrants in the so-called Calais Jungle — until the French authorities decided to demolish the camp. The necessity of managing the increasing number of migrants notwithstanding, this forceful decision violently evicted the refugees from their temporary homes once more. When 170 buses descended on the Jungle to deport [!] the migrants and settle them elsewhere, hundreds of children and young adults were left behind, leaving them open to police abuse in a situation which the non-governmental organisation Human Rights Watch compared to ‘Living in Hell’ in its report published in July 2017 (<https://www.hrw.org/report/2017/07/26/living-hell/police-abuses-against-child-and-adult-migrants-calais>).

Eighteen months after the Calais Jungle was closed down, little has changed for the migrants in the area. The Old-Catholic monk Br Johannes Maertens notes: ‘it is estimated that around 600 refugees now live on the streets, parks and grasslands of Calais. The refugees are dependent on the local associations for a warm meal, clothes and sleeping bags. Refugees are often exposed to violence on the streets and their sleeping bags are taken by the police. [...] The police don’t seem to distinguish between the adults and minors; they do not guide the minors to the social services responsible for minors. We need an urgent Christian response to this inhumane situation’.

Br Johannes himself has been central in establishing such a response. The Maria Skobtsova Catholic Worker House was set up in February 2016, providing secure accommodation for the refugees and developing into ‘an informal meeting place and a community for people from Calais with a heart for refugees, volunteers, people with a learning disability from L’Arche, people from the parishes and refugees’ (<https://mariaskobtsova.org/about/>). Inspired by the example of Maria Skobtsova who provided shelter for persecuted Jews in Nazi-occupied Paris during the Second World War and was murdered in the gas chambers at Ravensbrück concentration camp on Holy Saturday 1945, over 70 volunteers from many different church contexts have supported Br Johannes in his mission to the young refugees of Calais since 2016. Driven by the Christian faith, the house is more than simply another social aid organisation: the community seeks to be prayerfully present, not only offering a spiritual home to the migrants but deepening and nurturing the volunteers' own faith through the deep spirituality of the migrants.

This year, Bishop Robert has chosen to support the project with his Lent Appeal. The money raised across the chaplaincies in the Diocese in Europe will be used to finance the house and its outreach ministry, and to equip a newly recruited priest with the resources needed to establish additional small projects among the migrant community. The Diocesan website offers some more information about the Lent Appeal and now also hosts a short video about the work at the Maria Skobtsova Catholic Worker House (<https://europe.anglican.org/main/latest-news/post/1334-bishops-lent-appeal-2018>).

As this Lent we hear once more the story of the Israelites and their oppression in a foreign land, their search for a better life, let us — who have been liberated through a Refugee's victory upon the Cross of Calvary — bless those in search of a life, freely lived in our own day.

The Church of the Wounded Soldiers

The memorial plaque in St. Peter's Church (photo Guy Girardet)

Have you ever been to Château d'Oex? If you have taken the Golden Pass railway line from Spiez to Montreux, you have indeed passed through. Or maybe you were visiting the International Hot Air Balloon Festival that takes place every year in January? My own visit a long time ago was to see the wonderful collection of paper cuts, a traditional art form of the region, in the local museum. I did not realize then that there is an Anglican church in Château d'Oex (pronounced like the German See with a D), until I came across an old postcard of it from the early 1900s. I was surprised; where there was an "Eglise Anglaise", there must have been substantial numbers of English speaking people, yet Château d'Oex is not known for this as other resorts in the Bernese Oberland are. In fact, it was discovered by English visitors early in the second half of the 19th century. They came up to the Pays d'en haut - the "Highlands" - from Montreux, perhaps seeking a place less overrun by international travellers than the towns along Lake Geneva. Yet in time Château d'Oex, became a fashionable resort as well, especially when in 1904/1905 the Montreux-Oberland-Bahn opened railway connections to the North as well as the South. Although nearby Gstaad is much better known today, its development for tourism really began only after the trains allowed easy access.

English prisoners of war arriving in Château d'Oex
(from <http://interned-in-switzerland-1916.ch/>)

By then Château d'Oex was already well established among the British, and many of them had become permanent residents. There had been Anglican services since at least 1866, when it had been placed on the list of the Continental Church Society CCCS (today Intercontinental Church Society ICS). The Berthod brothers, two local hotel owners, gave a plot of land to the CCCS, and in the summer of 1899 St. Peter's church was built within little more than two months. Five years later the congregation had grown so much that services had to be held at Hotel Berthod and another aisle was added to the church in 1911. Baeder's Guidebook for 1913 mentioned that there were five services on Sundays!

Then came the Great War, the borders were closed and tourism broke down. Two years into the war, however, rescue came for the hotels, pensions and all who had made their living from the tourist trade. The Swiss government, with the help of the International Red Cross, was to take in 68'000 wounded and sick prisoners of war. This was not just a generous humanitarian act. The Swiss had seen what happened to Belgium, another country that had declared itself neutral: it was overrun by German forces in 1914. By proving that Swiss neutrality had advantages for all parties in the conflict, the Swiss were hoping to keep their country safe. So between 1916 and 1918 large contingents of French, Belgian, British, Indian and Canadian soldiers from German Camps as well as German soldiers from POW camps in Britain were to be transferred to a number of Swiss mountain villages for care and recovery.

Apparently Château d'Oex was the first local community offering to take care of several hundred internees, so at the end of May 1916 two trains with British soldiers arrived. Their journey from Constance had been triumphant, with cheering crowds throwing flowers into the carriages wherever the trains stopped. In Château d'Oex, too, the whole village assembled at the station to greet the British "heroes". The band played, children sang, there were flowers and speeches, and tears of joy on all sides, then the foreigners were taken to the hotels and guesthouses while Boy Scouts took care of the baggage. During their stay the men were allowed free movement within the village, and various craft workshops were set up. Some of the married men were visited by their wives; an appeal launched in England contributed funds for such visits.

In May 2016, one hundred years after the arrival of the first contingent of internees, a special event took place to commemorate that momentous occasion. The inspiration for this had come from a plaque in St. Peter's Church that had caught the attention of Guy Girardet, a member of the congregation. His discoveries led to a new awareness of the role the village had played in those last two years of World War I, and he proceeded to organize a centenary celebration. There was a Commemoration Service in St. Peter's Church and a conference with talks in English and French. Several descendants of internees had travelled to Château d'Oex for the occasion. Fifteen British regiments had sent letters to convey their gratitude for the hospitality and care given to the soldiers.

On the website of St. Peter's Church history fans can find everything about the forgotten chapter of Swiss history that Guy Girardet has uncovered. Sunday services at the church are at 17h30; Elizabeth Bussmann is one of the pastors.

Thank you for your help with this story, Elizabeth and Guy.

PS to the Mürren story

(December 2017 Magazine)

We now know why there was no trace of the marriage of Chloë Hodler's grandparents, Edward Varley and Anna Huggler in the local archives. According to a notice in the British Interned Magazine of November 1917 kindly sent to Chloë by a friend, they travelled to Bern "to be joined in matrimony". First they had a date with the British Consul, and later the knot was tied – guess where? - at St. Ursula's Church.

Retreat at Bose – Be Still and know I am God

A chance encounter in the fall with my good friend Chloë who mentioned going on a Retreat to Italy, caught the better of my attention and after a few initial queries as to what it was all about I went out on a limb to join the group. However, not having a single clue about the Monastery at Bose or how the retreat was to be run and the very act that I, the only Roman Catholic among a group of Anglicans led by their Anglican pastor, gave me a sense of trepidation as to how a wolf amongst lambs or the other way around,(!) was going to be received.

The moment we met at the Bahnhof, my fears were cast aside as I was warmly greeted and welcomed into this little group of six and we proceeded on our uneventful train ride of nearly 5 hours, via Milan and Santhia near Turin.

Arriving in Bose during lunchtime we were warmly welcomed by a brother who hurried us into a courtyard guiding us to room Emmaus for lunch. If I may mention, each room here has a Biblical name, and in the centre is an oak table hand crafted by monks seating 12 people, resonant of Christ's table at the Last supper. We were briefly told that lunch is conducted in silence and conversation is conducted only towards the end of the second course, while evening meals were more relaxed with conversation. The meals, I am delighted to say, were delicious, cooked mostly with home grown vegetables and herbs and carefully prepared the Italian way. Since Bose has an average of 20,000 visitors a year, these small rooms allow for the monks to get acquainted with the visitors and find out what brought them to this unique location.

The brothers and sisters here are called to follow Christ in community life and in celibacy based on the Rule of Bose where the monastic principles of solitude and prayer, work and poverty are adhered to. Hospitality remains a fundamental ministry of every brother and sister of Bose and we found this so prevalent in our encounters with the clergy here. A monk approached us one morning to say how very happy and honoured they were to have us in their midst and for us to cascade his message to our group. I found this quite remarkable.

From waking up early in the dark hours of the morning to attend the first of three daily community prayers based on the Latin tradition and where the Psalms are sung in such sublime unison alternating between the monks and nuns – mere words fail to express the absolute joy and rapture one feels during these half hours of worship, bringing one a step closer to heaven. Carried away by this angelic harmony of singing praises to God, I could have levitated!

After dinner we regrouped again to one of the rooms for further talks and discussions on the various aspects of this community. Stephen nourished our thirst for contemplation from excerpts of books that he read from- Babettes' Feast by Isak Dinesen, Night Thoughts by Martin Israel are among a few that gave us an insight into true Christian values. I found these discussions after Stephen's talk and Brian's testimony on his healing ministry highly inspiring.

This monastery, set on a high plain amidst the natural surroundings of snowcapped Italian alps on one side, to dense chestnut forests on the other, is definitely a place to get away from it all for all who seek solitude and peace and nourishment for the soul. After a traumatic few months of personal loss and sadness – this was what my soul was yearning for and I have returned with a deep sense of calm and feel strengthened in my faith. Three days however is a short time.

I am truly indebted and grateful to my little group, to Chloë for inviting me in the first place, to Stephen for initiating the idea of going on this retreat and lovingly leading his flock to discover this unique practice of Ecumenism at Bose, his patience above all with all our queries and for being a good listener. To Maxine, Vinitha, Brian and Lynn for welcoming me with open arms and making me feel like a lamb among lambs!

On the whole I found this a unique and an exceptional expression of ecumenism, where brethren from various denominations within the Christian diaspora are united to live under one church serving the same God. A true example of where our churches should be heading.

As the psalmist says, “Be Still and know I’m God”.

May God Bless you all.

Do you care about God's Creation?

On 28 April, St Ursula's is hosting a conference on Creation Care, part of the Swiss Archdeaconry's Continuing Education Programme, SACEP. There will be speakers from A Rocha, telling us how to live lightly, how to avoid consumerism, and how to instil a wonder for the created world in other people who are less observant! And a speaker from the Green Christian Organization will tell us about the Joy in Enough campaign, which seeks to fuse together theology, ecology and economics. It promises to be very interesting – pick up a flyer in the hall or on line, and tell Hilary Jones (hilaryjones@bluewin.ch): the cost of the conference, with (ecological!) lunch, is a very modest Fr20, payable on the day.

More Additions to the Church Library

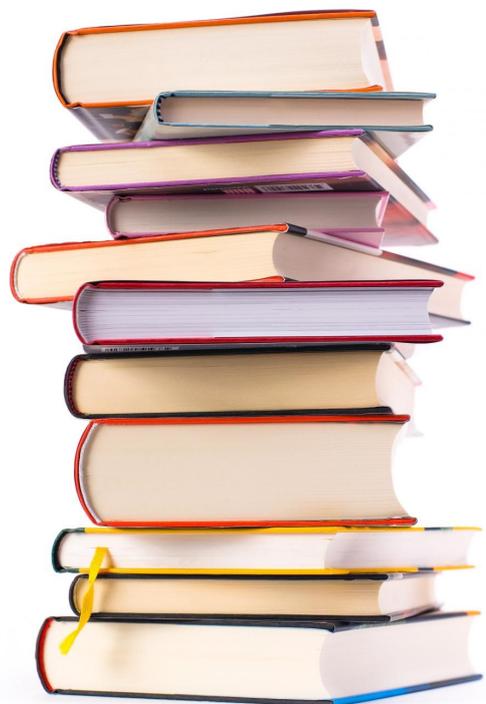

Thanks to an anonymous donor we again have new (to us) books for the library. Many thanks, whoever you are!!!

Some of the titles are "Green Christianity – Caring for the Whole Creation", "Live for a Change – Discovering and Using Your Gifts", "How to Read the Book of Revelation" and "Prayers for Teenagers".

Also new to the library are eight choral CD's kindly donated by Hans Karl Pfyffer. These are mainly modern choral works, both sacred and secular, by people such as John Rutter and Bob Chilcott with some old favourites thrown in like "Deep River" and "When I Survey the Wondrous Cross".

Come by the library during coffee time!!
Better still, borrow a book or CD!

Report on our Diccon Bewes event 9 March 2018

Over 50 people gathered for a fun evening in our Church hall. Diccon gave a very funny talk highlighting lots of things that Brits experience differently in Switzerland than the Swiss do. He also told us some great stories about his experiences in Switzerland and in Stauffacher's, as well as some interesting historical facts about Switzerland.

Jana, her daughters and Tricia had prepared a super dinner, which was ably served by our super helpers from the international school. We could not have done it without those lads, who worked uncomplaining for several hours, and even cheerfully did the washing up: A big thank you to them, and also to Jana for giving up her day off to prepare everything. It definitely could not have happened without you.

Diccon also had prepared a quiz for the night, which the 10 teams really enjoyed very much. The questions were challenging without being impossible, and there was a lot of fun and competitive banter in the room. There were prizes for the top 3 teams, and a consolation prize for the last placed team.

Yours truly was on the bar, and of course counting the generous donations and takings afterwards. After expenses we raised around Fr1300 which we are splitting 50:50 with MSF (Médecins Sans Frontières), the nominated charity from Diccon.

It was a very good outreach event, and thrilling that two of the people who came along enjoyed it so much that they came to the Church service on the Sunday afterwards. That is how it should be.

Diccon was also selling some of his books, and so to end the report here is a joke from one that I bought, and which he also told us that evening.

An English girl, a French girl and a Swiss girl are discussing where babies come from.

The English girl says, "In England the stork brings the babies".

The French girl says "In France, Mama and Papa go to bed early, and nine months later there is a new child."

The Swiss girl says, "With us it differs from canton to canton".

Easter is a season of joy and hymn singing. The Lord is risen indeed, alleluia – this is the message, and many of our hymns take up the theme. “Jesus Christ is risen today, alleluia”, “The strife is o’er, the battle won”, “Alleluia, alleluia, hearts to heaven and voices raise”. Some of these hymns date back to ancient times . “The day of resurrection” comes from St John of Damascus, who died in 754 AD.

Another favourite Easter hymn, “Thine be the glory” is far from ancient, and also far from distant, for it was written by Edmond Budry, a pastor of the Free Reformed Church of the Canton of Vaud. Budry was from Vevey, and spent 35 years as pastor there. He is said to have written the hymn in 1884, at the age of 30, when his first wife died. At that time he was at nearby Cully. (He also ministered for a while in Ste Croix, in the Jura Vaudois.) The sure faith in the Resurrection the hymn conveys would have reinforced the prayer that Budry’s wife would be brought “safe through Jordan to thy home above”.

It would be good to think that these thoughts were in Budry’s mind. Alas, the third verse in French reads:

Craindrais-je encore? Il vit à jamais,
Celui que j’adore, le Prince de paix;
Il est ma victoire, mon puissant soutien,
Ma vie et ma gloire : non, je ne crains rien!
À toi la gloire, O Ressuscité!
À toi la victoire pour l’éternité!

The translation of the first and second verses runs far closer to the original. It was made by a Baptist minister, Richard Birch Hoyle the early 1920s. Hoyle was a skilled linguist (he was one of the first to translate Karl Barth’s works into English), and edited The Red Triangle, the magazine of the English YMCA. In 1922, the World Student Christian Federation, based in Geneva, set out to print its ecumenical hymnbook, Cantate Domino, in French, German and English, and commissioned Hoyle to translate À toi la gloire into English. Cantate Domino appeared in 1925.

Edmond Budry wrote his hymn to the tune of George Frederick Handel’s chorus See the conquering hero comes, originally written for his oratorio Joshua and later reused in Judas Maccabeus. Budry may have been influenced by a German Advent carol written to the same tune in around 1820, Tochter Sion, freue dich, and attributed variously to Johann Joachim Eschenburg or to Friedrich Heinrich Ranke. This carol could also fit the theme of Palm Sunday, or indeed of Easter too, for what can we do at Easter except rejoice? Christ has won victory over death, and by his deathless love, will bring us safely, with all the saints, to his heavenly home. Alleluia!

- Hector Davie

Thine be the glory, risen, conquering Son;
endless is the victory, thou o'er death hast won;
angels in bright raiment rolled the stone away,
kept the folded grave clothes where thy body lay.
*Thine be the glory, risen conquering Son,
Endless is the victory, thou o'er death hast won.*

Lo! Jesus meets us, risen from the tomb;
Lovingly he greets us, scatters fear and gloom;
let the Church with gladness, hymns of triumph sing;
for her Lord now liveth, death hath lost its sting.
*Thine be the glory, risen conquering Son,
Endless is the victory, thou o'er death hast won.*

No more we doubt thee, glorious Prince of life;
life is naught without thee; aid us in our strife;
make us more than conquerors, through thy deathless love:
bring us safe through Jordan to thy home above.
*Thine be the glory, risen conquering Son,
Endless is the victory, thou o'er death hast won.*

Edmond Budry (1834-1932)
